Iran Agrees to Full Nuclear Inspections, Says Trump

Donald Trump. Photo: Al jazeera

U.S. President Donald Trump has claimed that Iran has agreed to allow the highest level of international inspections of its nuclear program.

In a post on his social media platform, Truth Social, Trump said no talks or agreement with Tehran would have been possible without acceptance of this condition.

He also stated that Iran had made concessions on several key issues, paving the way for continued navigation through the Strait of Hormuz. However, he added that the risk of the vital shipping route being blocked again is currently very low.

According to Trump, U.S. warships remain deployed and ready to respond to any potential crisis despite the easing of tensions.

Addressing Iran's frozen assets and possible sanctions relief, Trump said any released funds would be placed in special escrow accounts under U.S. supervision rather than being transferred directly to Iran.

He noted that the money would be restricted to purchases of food, medicine and other humanitarian goods, while also allowing the purchase of U.S. agricultural products such as corn, wheat and soybeans.

Iran has not yet issued an official response to Trump's remarks.

Source: Al Jazeera.