Final Draft of ‘July Declaration’ to Be Unveiled on August 5, Marking the Anniversary of the Mass Uprising

Collected picture

The final draft of the ‘July Declaration’, prepared by the interim government, will be officially presented to the nation on August 5 at 5 PM. A press release from the Chief Adviser’s Press Wing on Saturday stated that the announcement will be made in the presence of representatives from political parties and organizations involved in the mass uprising.

Mahfuz Alam, Adviser on Information and Broadcasting to the interim government, also confirmed the matter. In a verified Facebook post on Friday night, he wrote, “The July Declaration is now a reality. It will be published by August 5. Thanks to everyone for keeping the public aspiration alive and paving the way for its implementation.”

Since the mass uprising in July of last year, the ‘July Declaration’ has become one of the most talked-about issues in the country’s political arena. In particular, it has generated significant discussion and expectations among the parties and organizations involved in the anti-fascist movement and the uprising.

In preparation for the anniversary of the uprising, the interim government has sent the draft of the declaration to various political parties and organizations, including BNP, Jamaat-e-Islami, and the National Citizen Party (NCP). To build consensus on the issue, the Consensus Commission has held several meetings and discussion sessions.

It is worth noting that the declaration is being seen as a symbol of national unity and is expected to play a crucial role in shaping the political direction of the days ahead, according to those involved.