BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir has stated that the narrative portraying the BNP as being against reform is deliberately created. In reality, he noted, the BNP was among the first to call for political and administrative reforms. According to him, meaningful reform is essential for building a modern and democratic Bangladesh, and the BNP is ready to play a leading role in this effort.

Speaking at the inauguration of an online payment gateway at a hotel in Gulshan, Dhaka, on Sunday (November 2), Fakhrul highlighted the technological gap in the current generation. “Our generation is still lagging in technology. Learning and adopting new technologies is crucial to strengthening the party,” he said, urging BNP leaders and activists to be more active in the digital space.

He added, “Our Acting Chairman shares messages on social media, but often we fail to engage with them. Today, much of the political struggle takes place in the cyber space, and maintaining a strong presence there is vital.”

Fakhrul emphasized that the effectiveness of political work can no longer be measured by the number of rallies or speeches. “To reach people effectively, digital platforms must be utilized. Our leadership has already taken steps in this direction, and we all need to work together to advance it further.”
