Parliament Sets April 5 Debate on July Charter Plan

Parliament session. Photo: Collected.

The Parliament will hold a discussion on April 5 regarding the implementation process of the “July National Charter 2025.” A motion for adjournment on this matter has been accepted, and it is scheduled to be discussed for about two hours during the final part of the session on the designated day.

On Wednesday (April 1), a member of the ruling party raised the motion in the National Parliament. The Speaker accepted it and fixed the date and time for the discussion.

According to the proposal, the “July National Charter” is an important document of political consensus, outlining directions for various reforms, including constitutional amendments. It emphasized that a detailed discussion in Parliament is necessary to ensure its effective implementation.

Parliament was also informed that the charter, formulated with the participation of different political parties, is being considered a significant roadmap for state reform and political stability.