

Syrian security forces accused of killing hundreds of civilians

Syrian security forces are alleged to have killed hundreds of civilians belonging to the Alawite minority group in continuing violence along the country's coast, according to a war monitoring group

Syrian security forces are alleged to have killed hundreds of civilians belonging to the Alawite minority group in continuing violence along the country's coast, according to a war monitoring group. The British-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights (SOHR) said some 745 civilians had been killed in around 30 "massacres" targeting Alawites on Friday and Saturday. has not been able to independently verify these claims.

Hundreds of people have reportedly fled their homes in the region - a heartland of deposed president Bashar al-Assad, who also belongs to the Alawite sect. Syrian security forces accused of killing hundreds of civilians. EPA Two Syrian security troops man a checkpoint in Latakia - both carrying machine guns with one stood on the back of a truck. EPA Security forces have set up checkpoints in Latakia, on Syria's coast. Syrian security forces are alleged to have killed hundreds of civilians belonging to the Alawite minority group in continuing violence along the country's coast, according to a war monitoring group.

The British-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights (SOHR) said some 745 civilians had been killed in around 30 "massacres" targeting Alawites on Friday and Saturday. has not been able to independently verify these claims. Hundreds of people have reportedly fled their homes in the region - a heartland of deposed president Bashar al-Assad, who also belongs to the Alawite sect. A total of more than 1,000 people have been killed in the past two days, the SOHR said, in what is the worst violence in Syria since rebels toppled the Assad regime in December. This figure includes dozens of government troops and gunmen loyal to Assad, who have been locked in clashes in the coastal Latakia and Tartous provinces since Thursday.

Some 125 members of the Islamist-led government security forces and 148 pro-Assad fighters have been killed in the violence, according to the SOHR's report. A Syrian defence ministry spokesman told the country's Sana news agency that the government had re-established control after "treacherous attacks" against its security personnel. The violence has left the Alawite Video footage shared by Reuters showed dozens of people chanting "people want Russian protection" outside the base. Meanwhile, dozens of families have fled to neighbouring Lebanon, according to local media. The UN's special envoy for Syria, Geir Pedersen, said he was "deeply alarmed" by "very troubling reports of civilian casualties" in Syria's coastal areas. He called on all sides to refrain from actions which could "destabilise" the country and jeopardise a "credible and inclusive political transition". neighbouring Lebanon, according to local media. The UN's special envoy for Syria, Geir Pedersen, said he was "deeply alarmed" by "very troubling reports of civilian casualties" in Syria's coastal areas. He called on all sides to refrain from actions which could "destabilise" the country and jeopardise a "credible and inclusive political transition". Alawites, whose sect is an offshoot of Shia Islam, make up around 10% of Syria's population, which is majority Sunni