Fires have erupted in several vehicles in central Israel after debris from newly launched Iranian missiles fell in different areas, according to U.S. media outlet CNN.

Israeli police reported that fragments of missiles were scattered across multiple locations, including Tel Aviv and nearby areas. However, no casualties have been reported so far.

The Israel Defense Forces (IDF) said search and rescue operations are underway in the affected areas.

An IDF spokesperson suggested, based on the pattern of impact, that the damage may have been caused by cluster-type munitions.
