At least 16 people have been killed and more than 15 others injured in Israeli air and drone strikes across southern Lebanon, according to medical sources and local media on Tuesday.

In the Deir Qanoun al-Nahr area of the Tyre district, 10 people, including women and children, were killed in an attack. There are concerns that more people may still be trapped under the rubble. In the al-Mahfara area of Kfarsir town, four more people, including two women, were killed in a strike on a house.

In the Harouf town of the Nabatieh district, one person was killed in a drone strike near a municipal building. Another person died in an attack targeting a motorcycle in the Frun area.

Hezbollah claimed it carried out a drone strike targeting an Israeli military communications vehicle in the Taibeh area. The group also said it launched rocket attacks on Israeli troop and military vehicle positions in the Rishaf area.

According to Lebanon's Ministry of Health, the death toll in the ongoing conflict since March 2 has risen to 3,042, with 9,301 people injured.

Israel says 1,043 of its soldiers have been injured in border clashes so far, including 59 in critical condition.
